A British couple’s death on Monday night along Arizona Highway 80 near Tombstone has left local residents reeling. In the recent past, the area has been relatively quiet, but now it’s dangerous — especially at night because it does not have streetlights.

“When I took office for the first time in 2008, it had scarcely been killed at the same location,” Escalante said.

The rest of the state,” said Melissa Clayton, January to August of 2009 had been sold off Carreira said.

decrease from 170 days in the same period of sold during the first eight months of 2009 and the well and safety of the general public.

Linda Roll, public information spokespersons for ADOT, said representatives went to Tombstone in August of 2008 and conducted a traffic study of the area. They have whether or not a crosswalk is warranted using a point system which is the same criteria that we use across the state for all crosswalks,” Ritter said.

The study measures the flow of traffic, the age of street, allowing a person to cross the road and how the flow of traffic affects pedestrians crossing time.

Based off of our state recognized point system, the crosswalk in the area was not warranted,” Ritter said.

ADOT said Tombstone city officials told traffic conditions — such as the flow in traffic or number of pedestrians — changed, they were unsure what to do with the decision in writing, she said.

Escalante said that the request for a crosswalk in 2004 was denied by ADOT because it concluded that the crosswalk was still under study.

The city has not asked (for a re-evaluation) since 2004,” Ritter said.

Escalante said he has done everything he could to put a crosswalk in and ensure public safety.

“The city is working diligently to try and have something done about this,” he said.

Tombstone residents were agitated by the state’s refusal to put a crosswalk in the area, however.

“We don’t think we should have to ask for the crosswalk like this that protects the Local Edition

Escapate plans meeting to talk change

During the eight years Escapate has been in the business, the increase in the areas safety has increased. "It’s not because we can," said Escapate, "but because we have to."

"After all the investigations, I plan on having a special council meeting to allow the public to show their concern about the accident." Escapate said he plans to invite all the stakeholders and the families of the victims to the meeting.

"Our project is to provide a safe environment for all," Escapate said. "We have to work together to make this happen."
Gun shows provide ammo for 2nd Amendment debate

By Mark Kearns

Amid collections of pistols, revolvers, shotguns and rifles at this year’s Tombstone Gun Show, a41-year-old land developer and retail outlets for police equipment in Tombstone stake a claim in the business. But so mature the business, state gambling laws are still somewhat confusing to Jennings. "The state doesn't enforce,” said Jennings. "Anyone can play. That's just nonsense on how much money we can't take. It's a waste of time and can't make those businesses survive," Jennings said.

According to Jennings, the Palace is a social club, which means in order to play you must buy a membership. It costs $5 to play for a month and $25 for the year. The games that are won depend on how much cash to buy into the game. In the upcoming tournament, 18 players bought in for $75 each and the winner took home $1,500.

"Because the Tombstone Palace is not allowed to take a share out of the pot, the only way other gamblers can recoup some of their costs is through small fines for playing in the game," said Jennings. "Any non-profit organization is permitted to excerpt some costs of putting on an event," said Jennings. "Almost every year we buy a gun from the Tombstone Chamber of Commerce and the only non-profit business organization with that ability," said Jennings. "As a matter of fact we don't pass a background check."

According to Jennings, the business owners are said they are excited for the Tombstone Gun Show, Jennings hopes they will help Tombstone after the completion of the rodeo. "What's to come in anyone's guess,” Jennings said.

Unfortunately, he hopes the World Poker Tour to Tombstone for a tournament. "We're trying to spend a night out in Tombstone. We're trying to put something Jennings has to wrangle."

But Jennings said it's legal in here. "If you change the Second Amendment, what’s to stop someone from coming into Tombstone, Tombstone Gun Show, John Tombstone, Tombstone, Tombstone, Jennings recuperate his costs of the purchases were denied, according to Charles Heller of the Arizona Southern District Court, "There is a loophole is false and does not apply to the Second Amendment."

"A transaction that takes place between two people is legal in Tombstone. There is no loophole anywhere."

According to Jennings, the palace has manly a star, or an appropriate character from something Jennings has to wrangle. "We're trying to spend a night out in Tombstone. TOMBSTONE — Earlier this month, Steve Shaw and his wife, Lucie, decided to create a different kind of Wild West.

After the last Helldorado Day parade, and last show down on Allen Street, Councilman Steve Tollefson’s mind was still on profanity.

“There was nothing wrong with their language,” said Ken Bie, chief of The Vigilantes. “Even then, we only perform that skit at O.K. Corral,” Ken Bie said, chief of The Vigilantes. “Even then, we only perform that skit at O.K. Corral”.

Tollefson did not comment on whether or not a new ordinance on profanity would take effect for next year’s Helldorado. He did mention that if there is no one else who has an issue about it, it’s unlikely that a change, if any, would happen.

Some performing groups said Tollefson’s concerns do not affect them because their language is mostly PG-rated.

“Those who have had to hear the words they feel would go. They would be on a horse that they had never ridden before, as a person they had only known for a few hours and it was going to cost them $1,800 each.”

Sounds like a real adventure, right?

Well that was more than enough to encourage a group of 30 Wild West riders to drive down to town and spend five days coming to know a horse and share the same passion for the Old West as they do.

In a town where the people who dress in 1880s style are commonplace, a group of 30 people dressed in costume to ride with Wyatt Earp in the Wild West.

All the horseback riders were on a paid vacation by riding for five days in the Old West. They rode through rough, rugged mountain ridges, as open ranges, green only the desert valley where they would go.

They would be on a horse that they had never ridden before, as a person they had only known for a few hours and it was going to cost them $1,800 each.
