A call for help: Merchant challenges city rules about Allen Street fliers

By Regisio Sanchez

One suspected burglar is off the streets thanks to a little vigilism on the part of a Tombstone construction worker.

The crime was reported on Feb. 7, around 5 p.m. at a construction site on Fourth Avenue. John Downs, who works on the job site, reported that the culprit had been watching him work on his tent and sleeping bag had been stolen.

The name of the arrested suspect was not released because of ‘Two dollar margaritas!’ — a favorite passing out fliers holler up this Tuesday night.

"What (Downs) did was be sure he was watching me all the time," Talvy said if a person sees something suspicious, they should report it to the marshal's office.

"Hopefully we can get those people, too." Talvy said. "And we're going to be right about every time we get a com-plaint." Talvy said.

A day at the border is not just about illegals

By Heather Trujillo
The Tombstone Epitaph

I have been to Mexico for times and times and times, but never before had I seen a border fence, until I was there for a day in February along with 1,000 beavers. In fact, it was the only time I had seen a beaver. The animal kingdom is vast and the creatures there are, well, fascinating. The beaver is one of them, and it’s a great reminder of how we should be respecting and caring for our natural environment.

The border fence was a sight to behold. It stretched for miles, with the beavers darting back and forth, trying to reach the next tree line. The animals were everywhere, and the sound of their chattering teeth was deafening. It was a strange and surreal experience, to say the least.

The beavers were not the only creatures I saw during my trip. I also saw a range of wildlife, from birds to fish to insects. It was a truly wild and wonderful experience. I learned a lot about the environment and the importance of protecting it.

The beavers are fascinating creatures, and it was a great experience to see them up close. I hope that this trip will inspire others to learn more about the environment and the creatures that live in it.

They don’t usually think of the Border Patrol as the environment- alists, but in an area where water and wildlife are at a premium, they are. “They’re water takers,” said one agent.

“Water is key to survival in this environment,” said another agent. “It’s essential for the ecosystem to thrive.”

The Border Patrol is a key player in the conservation efforts in this area. They work closely with local environmental organizations to protect the natural resources in the area.

People often ask me why I joined the Border Patrol. I tell them that it’s because I want to make a difference in the world. I want to help protect the environment and the creatures that depend on it.

I’ve had some close calls out here. Once, I was pursuing a group of illegal immigrants when they suddenly turned off the road and walked into the water. I couldn’t believe it — they were just trying to get away from me. It was a scary moment, but I knew I had to keep going. I was determined to catch them.

The Border Patrol is a tough job, but it’s also incredibly rewarding. I get to see some of the most beautiful places in the world, and I get to help protect the creatures that live there.

I’ve been with the Border Patrol for five years now, and I’m still learning. Every day is a new adventure. I hope that I can continue to make a difference in the world, and that I can help protect the environment for future generations.

Johnny Bencomo strums an 18-string guitar at the Cochise County Courthouse in Tombstone, Ariz. If you’ve ever played a guitar, you know that there are limits to what you can do with that six-string instrument. But with 18 strings, the possibilities are endless.

Bencomo, who has been playing the guitar for more than 50 years, has created a unique sound that’s only possible with so many strings. He’s used his 18-string guitar to create a range of music, from folk to classical, and everything in between.

“I’ve been playing this guitar for more than 50 years, and I’m still learning,” Bencomo said. “There are so many different ways to play this instrument, and I’m only just beginning to scratch the surface.”

The guitar is a passion for Bencomo, and he’s dedicated his life to perfecting his craft. He’s played at venues throughout the country, and his music has touched countless lives.

“People love hearing it Tombstone any- one of the rarest instruments in the world,” Bencomo said. “It’s a relic, a piece of history, and it’s something that’s truly special.”

Bencomo’s guitar is a work of art, and it’s a testament to the power of music. It’s a reminder that there are no limits to what we can create, as long as we’re willing to put in the time and effort.

The guitar is a symbol of the American dream, and we’re all capable of achieving it. It’s a reminder that with hard work and dedication, we can create something truly remarkable.

Marcia Radke, wildlife biologist with the Bureau of Land Management, watches as a beaver runs along the San Pedro River. “We have 12 bullets, so you have to be ready to take a shot,” she said. “We have to be ready for any- thing.”

Radke said that the Border Patrol is constantly on the move, sitting around, waiting. They’re always on the lookout, and they’re ready to act at any moment.

“We have to be ready for any- thing,” Radke said. “We can never let our guard down.”

But it’s not just criminals that the Border Patrol has to deal with. There are also illegal immigrants who are trying to cross the border.

“We have to be ready for any- thing,” Radke said. “We have to be ready to help.”

The Border Patrol is a tough job, but it’s also incredibly rewarding. I get to see some of the most beautiful places in the world, and I get to help protect the creatures that live there.

The Cochise Stronghold

On a cold January morning last year, I woke up early and met my friends at a local trailhead to begin a trail ride through the Cochise Stronghold area.

I was ecstatic to be able to ride through such a beautiful area, and we all had a great time exploring the wilderness.

The ride was a bit challenging, but it was definitely worth it.

As we continued on our trail ride, we were able to see various wildlife and enjoy the beautiful scenery around us.

In the afternoon, we took a break to enjoy some snacks and drinks, and then we continued on our ride.

The day ended with a beautiful sunset, and we all felt grateful to have been able to enjoy such a wonderful experience.

Walking from my car, I wondered why I had not ridden a horse before, for I was scared of hurting a wild animal.

While questioning my thoughts, I realized why I was afraid of riding a horse.

I took a deep breath and decided to give it a try.

With the help of my friend, Travis Stamps, I was able to get on the horse and begin my ride.

As we rode through the rugged terrain, I was amazed by the beauty of the landscape around us.

We encountered some obstacles, but we were able to overcome them with the help of our trusty horse.
